NEWS from HOLLYWOOD

Walt Disney's first full length motion-picture musical with all live actors will be the multimillion-dollar version of the Lyman Frank Baum tales, titled, "Rainbow Road to Oz." Bill Walsh, Sid Miller and Dorothy Cooper have been assigned by Disney to develop the project. Walt owns all of the Oz stories except the "Wizard," which belongs to M.-G.-M.

Jean Simmons won't be able to accompany her husband, Stewart Granger, to England because of her co-starring stint with Gregory Peck in "The Big Country."

We hear that William Holden plans to sell his Hollywood holdings and take his family to live in Switzerland.

While en route home from a location visit in Hawaii with Buddy Adler, Josh Logan became intrigued by a pretty, hazel - eyed Pan Am hostess, Muffet Webb. He offered her the role of one of Miss Ireen's nurse pals in "South Pacific." Her part in the film will act as a sort of test for a long-term contract at Twentieth Century-Fox.

Warner Brothers wants Tony Franciosa for the role of Noel Airman in "Marjorie Morningstar." It would spot him as co-star of Nathalie Wood, who has the title role.

Anne Baxter has two roles under consideration. The first is the lead in the Diana Barrymore story, "Too Much, Too Soon," in Hollywood, or an important role in "The Square Root of Wonderful," a play set for September rehearsal in which she would play the winner of a Georgia peach title.

Contrary to his former habits, Cary Grant made three pictures last year and is currently busy making another, "House Boat," with Sophia Loren. For some time, Grant had made only one picture a year. He credits his renewed energy to his wife's persuasion for him to give up drinking and smoking.

Ray Milland, who has been picture-making in London, returns to Hollywood in September, where he will begin work as director and star in "Stockade" for Herbert Yates at Republic studios early in October.

New Word, Old Woe

Homemakers Items

Cooking for two presents problems whether you are newly weds or alone after the family is gone. The problem of what to serve is sometimes complicated by leftovers that accumulate.

Advance planning is just as important when cooking for two as it is for a large family. Specialists advise planning the week's menus ahead of time. But make them flexible enough for changes. If you decide on the main course the rest of the meal falls easily into place.

Meat is usually the main item to consider. When possible, choose a meat that does double duty, such as a roast that can be served for dinner and used later as cold roast beef silces, hash, etc.

Space your menus well, so that you will not be eating the same kind of meat for three days in a row. Keep cooked meat covered tightly or wrapped in waxed paper or foil and stored in the refrigerator. Do not handle it again until you are ready to use it.

Desserts need not be a problem when preparing meals for two. Fruit and cheese, ice cream and sherbert are favorites and easily adaptable for meals for two. Individual pie shells and the already-cooked pie fillings on the market today may be the answer to dessert problems.

When shopping for snap beans, be sure they "snap" rather than bend. If they bend instead of snap, it is an indication that they have been off the vine too long and are just too old for really good eating.

Sprinkle fish or lamb chops with lemon juice a few minutes before cooking to bring out the flavor. The lemon juice also removes odors and helps tenderize.

Yugoslavia appears to have a bumper crop of nuts. Last year's harvest that may have been as well as economic effects.
